AMERICA'S DEBT TO LAFAYETTE

Washington Paid Tribute to Great Services Rendered.

WHEN the Revolution began Americans were still pioneers and straight shooters. The country was full of men who had seen service in war against the French and Indians. Washington had been all his life a soldier. It is not surprising that American officers felt quite able to handle the military situation without assistance from the host of applicants for commissions from abroad. Therefore when Washington heard that a young Frenchman named Lafayette had left his wife and child and crossed the ocean to serve the American cause as a volunteer without pay, he muttered: "One more incumbrance." But Lafayette pleaded: "Give me a chance; I do not want to be an honorary soldier."

He went to Washington's camp and there began a friendship which ran through so many years like an idyl. In 1788 Brissot visited Washington at Mt. Vernon with a letter from Lafayette.

Lafayette.

He says Washington "spoke to me of M. De Lafayette with emotion; he considers him as his child." Later, Lafayette sent to Washington the key to the destroyed Bastille, saying: "It is a tribute which I owe as a son to my adopted father, as an aid-de-camp to my general, as a missionary of liberty to its patriarch."

French Eager in Liberty's Cause.

The spirit of Lafayette was the spirit of Rochambeau's army. A host of young French officers looked on the expedition as a crusade for liberty, and crowded for places. Young Berthier was a volunteer at Yorktown, and he became a marshal of France, Viscount De Noailles marched afoot the whole 756 miles from Newport to Yorktown. Young Saint-Simon, Clousen, Chastellux, a brother of Mirabeau, a brother of Talleyrand, Barras, later Director Barras, and many other enthusiasts for liberty were in the expedition. They understood Americans. Equality was the particular American trait which impressed them most, and this idea was imported by them from America into France.

Rochambeau placed himself and his army under the command of Washington. The ragged Americans always had the right of the line. In case of equality of rank, the American officer always took command. Not so much as a cabbage was taken without payment. Before Yorktown the Americans were not skilled in siege operations, and Washington gratefully acknowledged the service of the French engineers. The French fleet closed the river, and the surrender came. Without that French help we tremble to think what might have happened.

Fired Lafayette's Ardor.

Toward the close of the year 1770, the duke of Cumberland, who was the brother of King George III of England, was traveling in France, and one day he arrived at the town of Metz, then a French possession. A certain count De Broglie, a veteran of many battles, was in command of the garrison, and, to do honor to his distinguished visitor, he invited some of his officers to meet him at dinner. Now it happened that the duke of Cumberland was in disfavor with his royal brother—he was, in fact, in banishment. He had lately received news that certain of his majesty's colonies in America had rebelled and declared themselves free, declining to be subject any longer to a tyrannical king. It would seem that the duke of Cumberland told the story with some gusto, as if he were not altogether sorry that his brother was in trouble. One officer listened with particular attention. He was a youth of nineteen, tall and thin, with a long nose and reddish hair. His solemn expression and his somewhat awkward manner contrasted strongly with the frivolous ease and grace of the other young officers present. He was a marquis of long descent, connected by marriage with one of the greatest families in France, and he had at his own disposal a very large income. He listened intently, he asked many eager questions, and when he rose from the table he had made a momentous and historic resolution. He had resolved to abandon the pleasures and luxuries of the gayest court in the world, even to leave his young wife and child, and to cast in his lot with these strange rebels in America. In his own words, "When first I heard of American independence, my heart was enlisted." That young man was Lafayette; and when the American army went to the front in France, it merely paid a small part of the debt of gratitude we owe that splendid young officer—that true nobleman.

Appointed a major general by Washington in July, he fought at the battle of Brandywine in September and received an ugly wound. Soon again in the saddle, he went through many vicissitudes and privations with Washington at Valley Forge, his crowning exploit being the forcing of the retreat of Lord Cornwallis, leading to his surrender at Yorktown, in 1781. Although Washington and other famous American generals had joined him previous to the surrender, Lafayette, with a small force, had initiated the rout of Cornwallis at the battle of Albemarle. That the highest credit was due to Lafayette is shown by the fact that Washington warmly thanked and complimented him in the presence of the troops, after the great surrender which practically ended the war.

Patriot of Marblehead.
General Lafayette paid a tribute to Marblehead, Mass., by making two visits to the people, by whom he was received with bands of music and a huge procession of citizens. It is related that on his first visit in 1784 there was a controversy as to how the procession was to proceed through the main streets of the town, owing to the fact that at one of the sharp turns, a house so jutted into the road that the general's coach could not pass. On the morning of the great event, it was discovered that the patriotic family occupying the property had cut off a section of the house, removing the offending corner and thus the coach was driven without a hitch through the street. The house with part of the first story missing can still be seen in this story of 1919, and is shown in the illustration.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.
Cincinnati, O.—When the Hamilton county grand jury again begins its investigation of the high prices of foodstuffs and commodities it is its intention and that of Prosecuting Attorney Louis H. Capelle to make the inquiry sink to the bottom, by investigating the disposal of crops from the time they are planted until they are sold. The present grand jurors are to be reappointed by Judge Fred L. Hoffman and will devote the entire month of July to the food probe. Those in charge of the inquiry have been informed that buyers for wholesale dealers often purchase an entire crop immediately after it has been planted. Apple, pear, peach and plum crops are bought on the trees, at a fixed price for a tree, before the blossoms have appeared, the buyer "taking the chance." Potatoes are bought at an agreed price an acre, when in the ground, without a hill being uncovered to ascertain what sort of a crop can be expected.

It is declared that hundreds of acres of potatoes were purchased by wholesale buyers, in Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, during the war, and not a hill was opened. The entire crop was left to rot in the ground, because to place it on the market would have caused a slump in prices. Hundreds of orchards were allowed to stand, the fruit being allowed to decay on the ground, it is declared. Wholesalers are said to have bought the crops and decided to destroy them rather than permit them to glut the market.

With reference to foodstuffs in cold storage, it is said these places may be filled to overflowing with everything edible, but the draft upon their contents is gauged so as to prevent too much being put on the market at the same time. When large shipments of foodstuffs of the same kind are received wholesalers buy up these shipments and make room for them by "wantonly destroying" enough in storage to provide the additional space needed, it is declared.

The County Prosecutor has been informed that thousands of cases of eggs have been taken from cold storage each year and destroyed, in order to make room for new shipments of eggs and prevent a drop in prices. Loss on the eggs is made up by the extra profits obtained, it is said. The law providing a limit upon the time foodstuffs can remain in cold storage is evaded in the same manner, it is asserted. Warehouse owners are to be called to testify, and as they are agents, it is expected they will give important information.
